

[locked/work] Hey, Harpy?

It's considered
bad form
to go in without
all
the handles pulled

LOCATION: stand the fuck up on it, right?

MOOD: ecr

MUSIC: Amanda Palmer - Leeds United

...Wabbit wants to give you a birthday present. She asked Dr. Casey and got the okay already.

If she doesn't hurt herself for the next three and a half months, she wants to know if you'll come down and spend the day before your birthday with her.

It's her one-year anniversary, and it would mean a lot.

That would be an "of course."

Should I call Doc C., send Wabbit a snailnote, or both?

Both, probably?

I wish I could express in polite language how much I hate seeing her fragile and hesitant and pleading for things like she's already decided the answer is no.

Wabbits do not ask. Wabbits most especially do not ask for help. Wabbits sail in and take over.

Dammit.

She's in an abusive relationship, Platypus. She's afraid to want anything, because she knows her abuser can use it against her. It's pretty classic.

...Yeah. There's no polite language for how that makes me feel.

How many parts of speech is "Fuck" again? Bet I can use 'em all.

I think--I think she's bribing herself with you to hang on.

I hate it, but maybe it means we're getting her back.

She's always been tough. She's always been smart. She's always been creative and tricky. And unlike her neighbors, she knows what's happening to her. She's in an abusive relationship, but she's also one of ours under deep cover. She's going to work this one from the inside.

If there's anything I can do to keep her going, I'm going to do it.

And it really only cures cancer in the movies, but we love her and we're not letting go.

Right, sis?

Goddamn right. Not ever. No matter what.

Now get some sleep, Platypuzzle. Long hard day chasin' bad guys tomorrow. Don't want Mom and Dad to see you yawning. <3
